The skies were lowering to-day when the sick babies got up, and it looked woofully like rain. But what does a little rain signify to "The Evening World's" little excursionists! The great barge, William Myers, has acres of deci and good roofs over them, and the chil-dren and their mothers know that if it rains they will be amply protected from

Besides, didn't Weather Forecaster Dunn predict fair weather with only an occasional shower? And showers only help to cool the air, a thing very much

That is how it happened that when the stanch tug Genesta tooted the last call and warning at 8 o'clock this morning it began to pull away from the pier at the foot of West Eleventh street, the big barge tagging along in her wake, re were more sick babies on board tle brothers and sisters than had sailed from that port on either of the two pre vious Bick Babies' outings.

At Sylvan Beach, which is twenty-one miles from the Battery, on the Jersey shore of the Arthur Kills, everything was in readiness for giving the children and their mothers a good time on shore. There are the swings and boats, a fine shallow bathing place, shady lawns and wide fields, all abloom with the wild flowers of June, and all as free as the clear, pure, healthful air.

The husband has been apparently faithful. April 27 he had arrived at Memphis, Tenn. There he wrote saying he would probably reach his family in three weeks. He told Mrs. Erber to address a letter to him at the General Post, office in Washington, D. C., and when he got there he would let her know. Since that he has not been heard from by Mrs. Erber.

Meanwhile her welcome where she stayed seemed to wear out, and a few days ago she and the children came here and were taken in at the Leo House, an institution in State street.

But Mrs. Erber expects to become a mother again any hour and she could not remain in the Leo House longer, and nowhere else to turn, she applied to the police for relief this morning, penniless and comfortless, save her children and the hope that her husband is not dead.
